The Real Thing

A day in the life ...
... of a teleworker

Hi, I'm Stephen. I live in London and I'm a father, a househusband and a teleworker. That means that I don't go to work because my workplace is at home.

My working day is very busy. At six o'clock in the morning I feed my baby daughter Susie. My wife is not at home on weekdays. She's a flight attendant and comes back from work at the weekend. At half past six I go into my study, switch on my computer and answer some emails. After that it's time for my first coffee. About nine o'clock I have a phone call with my boss. I always hope that little Susie doesn't start crying in the middle of it. Before midday I go shopping and after that I clean the house. I don't have lunch, I have another coffee and a snack at the computer. Between two and three in the afternoon Susie and I go for a walk in the park. I always take my mobile so my boss or my colleagues can call me for information.

I start work again in the late afternoon and finish at about half past seven. At eight o'clock I put Susie to bed. After my evening meal I look at our two clocks in the kitchen. We have a London clock and a Toronto clock because my wife works on the London-Toronto flight. When it's nine p.m. in London, she has her afternoon tea break and I can call her on her mobile phone.
